[9] That's the color of a demon when it's not in Devil form. Note: When wearing the Sparda's armor, Dante gains the sparkles for each of the glowing parts of the armor (arm, leg, and torso). These are influenced by attack damage and the strength of Devil Trigger. The more damage Dante does, the more sparkly he'll be.

Trish, unlike Dante and Nero, is fairly standard. Her swords are one of two weapons she has access to (the other is a gauntlet). They work almost identically to each other, and with Dante and Nero, they're another great way to mix up his attacks. Though they do have some drawbacks: Trish has no ranged attacks. (sadface) This causes her to get defeated easily by enemies she should be able to defeat. Trish has a bunch of moves, but none are truly special. Her biggest strength is her EX, which is a watered-down version of Sparda's Devil Breaker. There is a lock-on option, a charging mechanic, and a heavy weapon that can be thrown and has a short range. This is by far the weakest of the character styles, but can be used in conjunction with the other styles to make up for it. Needless to say, Mundus is hella powerful. Like Nero, the Exceed system is very useful. He can summon up to three demons, each with its own abilities and benefits. As for the Devil Breaker, it's basically Nero, only with a much stronger base attack. His Exceeds can also raise the level of his primary weapons Exceeds, and after the third succeeds, the weapons change properties. When Mundus is on the ground, the characters he summons are invincible, but this is merely for show. They all start out as their normal forms, and transform into their Exceed forms, which are significantly stronger. Mundus is also tricky, for the most part. He has a number of ways to control the environment. For example, he can make his demon cling to the ground and pull the characters down. He can drop them in three directions, leaving them vulnerable to attacks. And as mentioned above, he can raise the level of his secondary weapons, adding to their power. Though he isn't as difficult as Nero or Dante, it doesn't stop Mundus from being ridiculously powerful. 5ec8ef588b
